

12 Sep 2020 18:00Z NOAA/NESDIS/STAR GOES-West GEOCOLOR

The Cascadia movement sees our culture, economies, and communities regenerate rather than extract.

Nature acts on the scale of watersheds, ecoregions, and bioregions. No matter what issue we are talking about - fires, smoke, flooding, earthquakes, food, energy, salmon, forests - if we want to be real about regeneration - this will take all of us working together, and working together on the scale of bioregions.

CASCADIAN SOLIDARITY Water is protected, food is organic and abundant, and power resides
with the people.
IMAGINE

CREDITS

Cover art by Lisa Bade
1-2, Columbia River Gorge,
julof90, Getty Images
1-2, Global Climate Strike 2021,
Eric Elmore, Street Roots
3-4, Dan Meyers, Unsplash
5-6, NOAA Satellite SEP 2020

cascadiabioregion.org

/cascadiabioregion

Welcome to CASCADIA

A Land of Falling Waters

Understanding bioregionalism:
A place-based reckoning;
a key way in which life self-organizes itself on Earth.

the interweaving of family, blood marriages, allies... people rather than geography - a network of peoples arranged through land, country, earth, soil - in both physical and political senses. The Chinook word for 'homeland' defined through the connection of

To be Cascadian is to live in right relationships with the land, water, and one another. It's a culture rooted in reciprocity, respect, and community care. A way of being, a choice to identify with the land itself.

CASCADIAN IDENTITY

THE MOVEMENT

The Cascadian culture emerges from the environment, and our future depends on living in balance with it.

A natural convergence of movements—climate, cultural, ecological—held together by love of place and a desire to regenerate from the ground up.

People are ready for change.

LOOWIT (MT. ST. HELEN'S) ERUPTION
MAY 18, 1980

DECENTRALIZED & GRASSROOTS